CRUISES "MALÈ - LAAMU - HUVADHOO" A WORLD OF EMOTIONS!

The extreme South Maldives crossing cruise is one of the most exciting routes you can ever experience in the Archipelago.

Getting out of the most commonly frequented courses, we navigate to the Equator starting from South Male atoll, quickly crossing the next atolls of FELIDHOO AND MULAKU. Not neglecting diving the most famous sites of such locations, preparing ourselves to the greater emotions of South Huvadhoo and Foammulah channels. We will not forget to explore the most celebrated: a bit of training in the most celebrated passes of Maldives, where big pelagic and migratory fish encounters are guaranteed.

Passing through THAA ATOLL we will spend the first night awaiting for the habitual visit of Whale Sharks: the largest fish of the ocean uses to stop by our stern lights to feed on the surface plankton, attracted by the powerful lighting; this will grant us unbelievable moments of close-by and undisturbed observation. One more amazing feature is represented, upon arrival at Thaa's edge, by the visit of Bryde's whales who, just like grown dolphins, love to follow the boats diving up and down in their proximity.

Next stop of navigation is the passage by LAAMU ATOLL: another scarcely attended destination, where we seldom cross other safaris, as it's almost exclusively a passage point. But it's definitely worth it to rest there for a while in order to fully enjoy its extraordinary channels, where it's not unusual to meet cartilage fish, both pelagic and filtrators, migratory fish and large predators, in a triumph of colors given by corals still in health and entirety.

And we finally make it to SOUTH HUVADHOO, the second largest atoll on Earth. Despite its great dimensions, dives in the North East monsoon season are concentrated in short tracks of navigation along the eastern edge, which is why lingering in Huvadhoo is absolutely recommended to non-divers too, who can enjoy the uncountable pristine beaches and sandbanks, where they might dedicate to swims and tanning with no comparison.

DIVING

Channel dives are universally known as possibly among the most exciting of the world, where the dropoffs remind of theatre galleries deliberately designed so the public can freely enjoy the show of fish passing by.

Those who don't mean to face the depths with scuba units, but would rather stick to observing fish and corals from above, won't be disappointed by the snorkeling tours. Great coral towers, soft and hard, still in very good conditions, host hundreds of species of barrier fish who are not frightened yet by the human presence. Given the large amount of seaweed algae, besides, there is a very high number of green turtles, often observed in more than one specimen per site. One more thrilling activity to carry out in this faraway atoll, whose pace is still imposed by Nature, is fishing. While navigation's you can experiment the catch large individuals of sail fish, oceanic tunas, marlins. Also line fishing can grant anyone incredible satisfaction due to the large amount of fish still living in these Southern seas. The atoll is actually popular for its tuna factories, whose fishing remains one of the few really sustainable on the Planet.

Here too it is possible to watch the whale shark at night – and most times more than one specimen at a time! Once again our crew will mount the stern lighting hoping for these gentle giants to visit with us for a midnight snack. Either slightly earlier or slightly later. Leaving Huvadhoo we get to FOAMMULAH, an island in the Equator channel advanced to the role of atoll even though not technically such. Dives in this area are most definitely reserved to expert divers, seeking for extraordinary adventures.

In co-operation with Fuvamulah Dreams Diving Center you will be taken to the famous Tiger Zoo in search of tiger, thresher, silver tip sharks and much else. Each dive represents a unique and unpredictable emotion, with guaranteed large predators and, sometimes, even special surprises as whale sharks, oceanic white tip sharks and so forth.

Definitely an itinerary for most refined travelers, destined for those recreational divers who already are familiar with the Maldives and perhaps look for a new thrill.

Once left the atoll-island of Foammulah we officially cross the Equator line to get to the most Southern and remote atoll of the whole Archipelago: ADDU.

These waters are seldom visited by safaris, therefore the dive sites are absolutely peculiar and uncontaminated. It is possible to dive a manta rays cleaning station, besides the classically North exposed channels where to observe dozens of sharks and pelagic fish. Last but not least, a real must-see is one of the best known and least visited ship wrecks of the country: the British oil tanker British Loyalty. Built in 1928, vastly used during WW2 and twice torpedoed by the Japanese marine in 1942 e and 1944, she was finally put at rest by the Royal Navy who decided to sink her honoring her with a marine burial scuttling her in 1946, in Addu waters. A 460 x 65 ft wreck, suitable for all levels of divers lying between 50 and 115 feet depth.
